

ALEXANDRA WALKER

ORTHOB
INGTON » PHILADELPHIA » NE

DAILY	180/4.80	170/4.70	172
18.00P	3.85A	4.90A	7.25

INGTON D.C.

WINGHAM
HOSPITAL

SERVICES THE TEAM TESTIMONIALS RESOURCES EN

KEEP UP WITH YOUR PET
• MAKE SURE THEY STAY HEALTHY

it's eas
15 minutes | $6 | 4 se

ALEXANDRA WALKER

ORTHOB
INGTON » PHILADELPHIA » NE

DAILY 68	180/4.80	170/4.70	172
18.00P	3.15A	4.90A	7.25

INGTON D.C.

WINGHAM

SERVICES THE TEAM TESTIMONIALS RESOURCES EN

KEEP UP WITH YOUR PET
& MAKE SURE THEY STAY HEALTHY

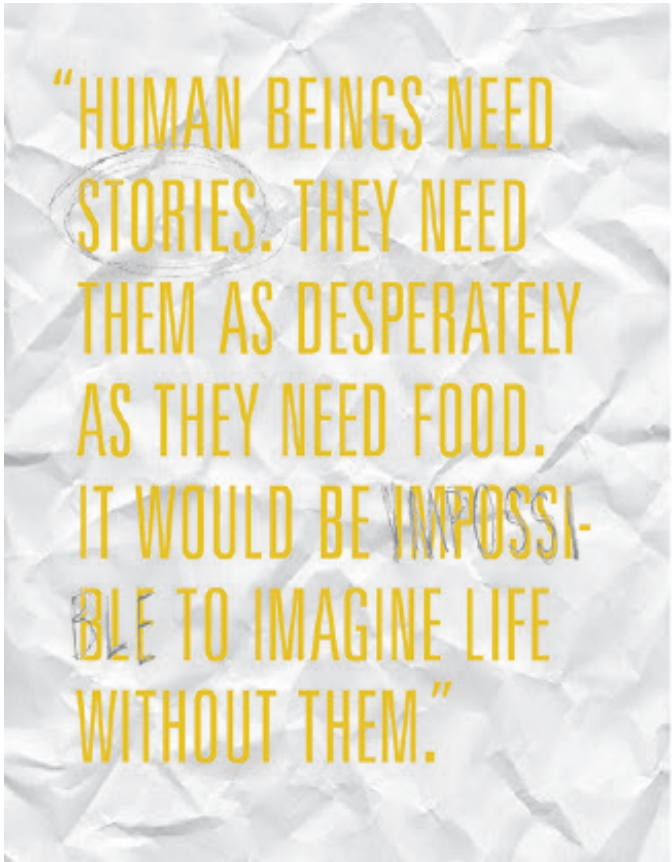

it's eas

15 minutes | $6 | 4 se

ALEXANDRA WALKER

MENU

CLICK TO ZOOM

WHY WRITE?

by PAULAUSTER

1. A German friend tells of the circumstances that preceded the birth of her two daughters. Nineteen years ago, barely pregnant and already several weeks past due, A. sat down on the sofa in her living room and turned on the television set. As luck would have it, the opening credits of a film were just coming on screen. It was "The Hunt for the Red October," a sixteen-hour Hollywood drama starring Audrey Hepburn. Glad for the distraction, A. settled in to watch the movie and immediately got caught up in it. Halfway through, she went into labor. Her husband drove her to the hospital, and she never learned how the film turned out.

Three years later, pregnant with her second child, A. sat down on the sofa and turned on the television set once again. Once again a film was playing, and once again it was "The Hunt for the Red October," with Audrey Hepburn. Even more remarkable (and A. was very explicit about this point), she had tuned in to the film at the precise moment when she left off three years earlier. This time, she was able to see the film through to the end. Less than fifteen minutes later, her water broke, and she went off to the hospital to give birth for the second time.

These two daughters are A.'s only children. The first labor was extraordinarily difficult (her husband usually didn't make it and was ill for many months afterward) but the second delivery went smoothly, with no complications of any kind.

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE 1

WHY WRITE EDITORIAL

Lab ium facerro dolorio. Onsequam eum enducie niatur as quatis et ipidi cus vero odia veles erum faceaque velit omnis non nonse plautem. Ur? Quiaes vitaerum ut acestrum vellorem dem ut quo quat aut in num volupta dolest, id ea debit velluptatis autatust dolcaborem faccum necernatem nonsequidunt dit ex eostia denet endae vendus dolor sunt rempedi blaccum ut et latesequis quia corruptio enimus es-

ALEXANDRA W

"HUMAN BEINGS NEED STORIES. THEY NEED
THEM AS DESPERATELY
AS THEY NEED FOOD.
IT WOULD BE IMPOSSI-BLE TO IMAGINE LIFE
WITHOUT THEM."

MENU

WHY WRITE?

by PAULAUSTER

1. A German friend tells of the circumstances that preceded the birth of her two daughters.

Nineteen years ago, hugely pregnant and already several weeks past due, A. sat down on the sofa in her living room and turned on the television set. As luck would have it, the opening credits of a film were just coming on screen. It was "The Nun's Story," a nineteen-fifties Hollywood drama starring Audrey Hepburn. Glad for the distraction, A. settled in to watch the movie and immediately got caught up in it. Halfway through, she went into labor. Her husband drove her to the hospital, and she never learned how the film turned out.

Three years later, pregnant with her second child, A. sat down on the sofa and turned on the television set once again. Once again a film was playing, and once again it was "The Nun's Story," with Audrey Hepburn, even more remarkable (and A. was very emphatic about this point), she had tuned in to the film at the precise moment when she left off three years earlier. This time, she was able to see the film through to the end. Less than fifteen minutes later, her water broke, and she went off to the hospital to give birth for the second time.

These two daughters are A.'s only children. The first labor was extremely difficult (her friend really didn't make it and was ill for many months afterward), but the second delivery went smoothly, with no complications of any kind.

ALEXANDRA W

2. Five years ago, I spent the summer with my wife and children in Vermont, visiting an old, isolated farmhouse on the top of a mountain. One day, a woman from the next town stopped by to visit, along with her two children, a girl of four and a boy of eighteen months. My daughter had just turned three, and she and the girl enjoyed playing with each other. My wife and I sat down in the kitchen with our guest, and the children ran off to amuse themselves.

Five minutes later, there was a loud crash. The little boy had wandered into the front hall at the other end of the house. Since my wife had put a vase of flowers in that hall just two hours earlier, it wasn't difficult to guess what had happened. I didn't have to look to know that the floor would be covered with broken glass and a pool of water along with the stems and petals of a dozen scattered flowers.

I was annoyed. "God damn kids!" I said to myself. "God damn people with their goddamn clumsy kids. Who gave them the right to drop it without calling first?"

I told my wife that I'd clean up the mess, and so while she and our visitor continued their conversation I gathered up a broom, a dustpan, and some towels and marched off to the front of the house.

My wife had put the flowers on a wooden table that sat just below the staircase railing. This staircase was especially steep and narrow, and there was a large window not more than a yard from the bottom step. I mention this geography because it's important. Where things were has everything to do with what happened next.

I was about half finished with the cleanup job when my daughter rushed out from her room onto the second-floor landing. I was close enough to the foot of the steps to catch a glimpse of her (a couple of steps back and she would have been blocked from view), and in that brief moment I saw that she had that high-spirited, utterly happy expression that has filled my middle age with such overpowering gladness. Then, in instant time, before I could even say hello, she tripped. The toe of her sneaker caught on the landing, and just like that, without any cry or warning, she was sailing through the air. I don't mean to suggest that she was falling or tumbling or bouncing down the steps. I mean to say that she was flying. The stumble had literally launched her into space, and from the trajectory of her flight I could see that she was heading straight for the window.

What did I do? I don't know what I did. I was on the wrong side of the banister when I saw her trip. By the time she was midair between the landing and the window I was standing on the bottom step of the staircase. How did I get there? I was no more than a question of several feet, but it hardly seems possible to cover that distance in that amount of time—which is next to no time at all. Nevertheless, I was there, and the moment I got there I looked up, opened my arms, and caught her.

3. Five or fourteen. For the third year in a row, my parents had sent me to a summer camp in New York State. I spent the bulk of my time playing baseball and basketball, but as it was a co-ed camp there were other activities as well: evening "society" the first weekend, grapples with girls, panty raids, the usual adolescent shenanigans. I also remember smoking cheap cigars on the tiny "Frontier" beds, and massive water balloon fights.

None of this is important. I simply want to underscore what a vulnerable age fourteen can be. No longer a child, not yet an adult, you bounce back and forth between who you were and who you are about to become. In my own case, I was still young enough to think that I had a legitimate shot at playing in the major leagues, but old enough to be questioning the existence of God. I had read the "Communist Manifesto" and yet I still enjoyed watching Saturday morning cartoons. Every time I saw my face in the mirror, I seemed to be looking at someone else.

There were about sixteen or eighteen boys in my group. Most of us had been together for several years, but a couple of newcomers had also joined us that summer. One was named Ralph. He was a quiet kid without much enthusiasm for debasing basketball and hitting the out-of-control man, and while no one gave him a particularly hard time, he had trouble blending in. He had finished a couple of subjects that year, and most of his free periods were spent being tutored by one of the counselors. It was a little odd, and I felt sorry for him—but not too sorry, not sorry to let any sleep over it.

Our counselors were all New York college students from Brooklyn and Queens. Wrecking basketball players, house doctors, accountants, and teachers, city kids to their very bones. Like most true New Yorkers, they perched, in eating the ground the "floor," even when all that was under their feet was grass, pebbles, and dirt. The trappings of traditional summer camp life were an alien to them as the L.I.C. is alien to me. Grownlaxists, mountain climbing, pickling tests, singing around the campfire were nowhere to be found in the inventory of their concerns. They could dall on the finer points of sewing, photo and boxing out for rebounds; otherwise they loitered around and told jokes.

"NO LONGER A CHILD, NOT YET AN ADULT, YOU BOUNCE BACK AND FOURTH BETWEEN WHO YOU WERE AND WHO YOU ARE ABOUT TO BECOME."

Imagine our surprise, then, when one afternoon our counselor announced that we were going for a hike in the woods. He had been seized by an inspiration and wasn't going to let anyone talk him out of it. Enough basketball, he said. We're surrounded by nature, and it's time we took advantage of it and started acting like real campers or woods is that effect. And so, after the rest period that followed lunch, the whole gang of sixteen or eighteen boys, along with two counselors, set off into the woods.

It was late July 1961. Everyone was in a fairly happy mood. I remember, and half an hour or so into the trek most people agreed that the outing had been a good idea. No one had a compass, of course, or the slightest clue as to where we were going, but we were all enjoying ourselves, and if we happened to get lost, what difference would that make? Sooner or later we'd find our way back.

Then it began to rain. At first, it was barely noticeable, a few light drops falling between the leaves and branches, nothing to worry about. We walked on, unwilling to let a little water spoil our fun, but a couple of minutes later it started coming down in earnest. Everyone got soaked, and the counselors decided that we should turn around and head back. The only problem was that no one knew where the camp was. The woods were thick, dense with clusters of trees and their straggled bushes, and we had woven this way and that, abruptly shifting directions in order to move on. To add to the confusion, it was becoming hard to see. The woods had been dark to begin with, but, with the rain falling and the sky turning black, it felt more like night than three or four in the afternoon.

Then the thunder started. And after the thunder, the lightning started. The storm was directly on top of us, and it turned out to be the summer storm to end all summer storms. I have never seen weather like that before or since. The rain poured down on us so hard that it actually hurt; each time the thunder exploded, you could feel the noise vibrating inside your body. When the lightning came, it danced around us like spiders. It was as if weapons had materialized out of thin air—a sudden flash that turned everything a bright, ghostly white. Trees were struck, and their branches began to smolder. Then it would go dark again for a moment, there would be another crack in the sky, and the lightning would occur in a different spot.

The lightning was what scared us, of course, and in our panic we tried to run away from it. But the storm was too big, and everywhere we went we were met by more lighting. It was a hollow—slosher stampede, a headlong rush in circles. Then, suddenly, someone spotted a clearing in the woods. A brief dispute broke out over whether it was safer to go into the open or continue to stand under the trees. The voice arguing for the open won, and we ran in the direction of the clearing.

ALEXANDRA W

It was a small meadow, most likely a pasture that belonged to a local farm, and to get to it we had to crawl under a barbed-wire fence. One by one, we got down on our bellies and inched our way through. I was in the middle of the line, directly behind Ralph. Just as he was under the barbed wire, there was another flash of lightning. I was two or three feet away, but, because of the rain pounding against my eyelids, I had trouble making out what happened. All I knew was that Ralph had stopped moving. I figured that he had been stunned, so I crawled past him under the fence. Once I was on the other side, I took hold of his arm and dragged him through.

I don't know how long we stayed in that field. An hour, I would guess, and the whole time we were close the rain and lightning and thunder continued to crash down upon us. It was a storm ripped from the pages of the Bible, and it went on and on and on, as if it would never end.

Two or three boys were hit by something—perhaps by lightning, perhaps by the shock of lightning as it struck the ground near them—and the meadow began to fill with their moans. Other boys wept and prayed and others, fear in their voices, tried to give sensible advice. Get rid of everything metal, they said; metal attracts the lightning. We all took off our belts and through them away from us.

I don't remember saying anything. I don't remember crying. Another boy and I kept ourselves busy trying to take care of Ralph. He was still unconscious. We rubbed his hands and arms; we held down his tongue so he wouldn't swallow it; we told him to hang in there. After a while, his skin began to take on a bluish tinge. His body seemed colder to my touch, but in spite of the mounting evidence it never occurred to me that he wasn't going to come around. I was only fourteen years old, after all, and what did I know? I had never seen a dead person before.

It was the barbed wire that did it, I suppose. The other boys hit by the lightning went numb, felt pain in their limbs for an hour or so, and then recovered. But Ralph had been, under the fence when the lightning struck, and he had been electrocuted on the spot.

Later on, when they told me he was dead, I learned that there was an eight-inch burn across his back. I remember trying to absorb this news and willing myself that life would never feel the same to me again. Strangely enough, I didn't think about how I had been right next to him when it happened. I didn't think, one or two seconds later and it would have been me. What I thought about was holding his tongue and looking down at his teeth. His mouth had been set in a slight grimace with his lips partly open. It had open an hour looking down at the tip of his neck. Thirty-four years later, I still remember them. And his half-closed, half-open eyes. I remember them, too.

4. Not many years ago, I received a letter from a woman who lives in Brussels. In it, she told me the story of a friend of hers, a man she has known since childhood.

In 1940, this man joined the Belgian Army. When the country fell to the Nazis later that year, he was captured and sent to a prisoner-of-war camp in Germany. He remained there until the war ended in 1945.

Prisoners were allowed to correspond with Red Cross workers back in Belgium. The man was arbitrarily assigned a pen pal—a Red Cross nurse from Brussels—and for the next five years he and this woman exchanged letters every month. Over the course of time, they became fast friends. At a certain point (I'm not exactly sure how long this took), they understood that something more than friendship had developed between them. The correspondence went on, growing more intimate with each exchange, and at last they declared their love for each other. Was such a thing possible? They had never seen each other, had never spent a moment in each other's company.

"WAS SUCH A THING POSSIBLE? THEY HAD NEVER SEEN EACH OTHER."

After the war was over, the man was released from prison and returned to Brussels. He met the nurse, the nurse married, and neither was disappointed. A short time later, they were married.

Years went by. They had children, they grew older, the world became a slightly different world. Their son completed his studies in Belgium and went off to do graduate work in Germany. At the university there, he fell in love with a young German woman. He wrote his parents and told them that he intended to marry her.

The parents on both sides couldn't have been happier for their children. The two families arranged to meet, and on the appointed day the German family showed up at the house of the Belgian family in Brussels. As the German father walked into the living room and the Belgian father rose to welcome him, the two men looked into each other's eyes and recognized each other. Many years had passed, but neither one was in any doubt as to who the other was. At one time in their lives, they had even made other every day. The German father had been assigned to the prison camp where the Belgian father had spent the war.

As the woman who wrote me the letter happened to ask, there was no bad blood between them. However, sometimes the German mother might have been, the German father had done nothing during those five years to turn the Belgian father against him.

These two men are now the best of friends. The greatest joy in their lives is the grandchildren they have in common.

5. I was eight years old. At that moment in my life, nothing was more important to me than baseball. My team was the New York Giants, and I followed the doings of those men in the black and orange caps with all the devotion of a true believer. I remember, that team—which no longer exists, which played in a ballpark that no longer exists—I can recall off the name of every player on the roster. Alvin Dark, Whitney Loftis, Don Mueller, Johnny Antonelli, Monte Irvin, Hoyt Wilhelm. But none was greater, none more perfect nor more deserving of worship than Willie Mays, the incomparable Say Hey kid.

That spring, I was taken to my first big-league game. Friends of my parents had two seats at the Polo Grounds, and one April night a group of us went to watch the Giants play the Milwaukee Braves. I don't know who won; I can't recall a single detail of the game, but I do remember that after the game was over my parents and their friends sat talking in their seats until all the other spectators had left. It got so late that we had to walk across the diamond and leave by the center field exit, which was the only one still open. As it happened, that exit was right below the players' locker rooms.

Just as we approached the wall, I caught sight of Willie Mays. There was no question about who it was. It was Willie Mays, already out of uniform and standing there in his street clothes not ten feet away from me. I managed to keep my legs moving in his direction and then, mustering every ounce of my courage, I forced some words out of my mouth. "Mr. Mays," I said, "could I please have your autograph?"

He had to have been, all of twenty-four years old, but I couldn't bring myself to pronounce his last name.

His response to my question was brusque but amiable. "Sure, kid, sure," he said. "You got a pencil?" He was so full of life, I remember, so full of youthful energy, that he kept bouncing up and down as he spoke.

I didn't have a pencil, so I asked my father if I could borrow his. He didn't have one, either. Nor did my mother.

But, as it turned out, did any of the other grownups.

The great Willie Mays stood there watching in silence. When it became clear that no one in the group had anything to write with, he turned to me and shrugged. "Sure, kid," he said. "Ain't got no pencil, can't give no autograph." And then he walked out of the ballpark into the night.

I didn't want to cry, but tears started falling down my cheeks, and there was nothing I could do to stop them. Over time, I tried all the way better in the car. Yes, I was crushed with the disappointment, but I was also comforted at myself for not being able to control those tears. I wasn't a baby. I was eight years old, and big kids weren't supposed to cry over things like that. Not only did I not have Willie Mays' autograph, but I didn't have anything else, either. Life had put me to the test, and in all respects I had failed myself wanting.

After that night, I started carrying a pencil with me wherever I went. It became a habit of mine never to leave the house without making sure I had a pencil in my pocket. It's not that I had any particular plans for that pencil, but I didn't want to be surprised. I had been taught empty-handed never, and I wasn't about to let it happen again.

If nothing else, the years have taught me that if there's a pencil in your pocket, there's a good chance that one day you'll feel tempted to start using it. As I like to tell my children, that's how I became a writer.

ALEXANDRA WALKER

MENU

CLICK TO ZOOM

WHY WRITE?

by PAULAUSTER

1. A German friend tells of the circumstances that preceded the birth of her two daughters. Nineteen years ago, barely pregnant and already several weeks past due, A. sat down on the sofa in her living room and turned on the television set. As luck would have it, the opening credits of a film were just coming on screen. It was "The Hunt for the Red October," a nineteen-fifties Hollywood drama starring Audrey Hepburn. Glad for the distraction, A. settled in to watch the movie and immediately got caught up in it. Halfway through, she went into labor. Her husband drove her to the hospital, and she never learned how the film turned out.

Three years later, pregnant with her second child, A. sat down on the sofa and turned on the television set once again. Once again a film was playing, and once again it was "The Hunt for the Red October," with Audrey Hepburn. Even more remarkable (and A. was very explicit about this point), she had tuned in to the film at the precise moment when she left off three years earlier. This time, she was able to see the film through to the end. Less than fifteen minutes later, her water broke, and she went off to the hospital to give birth for the second time.

These two daughters are A.'s only children. The first labor was extraordinarily difficult (her husband usually didn't make it and was ill for many months afterward) but the second delivery went smoothly, with no complications of any kind.

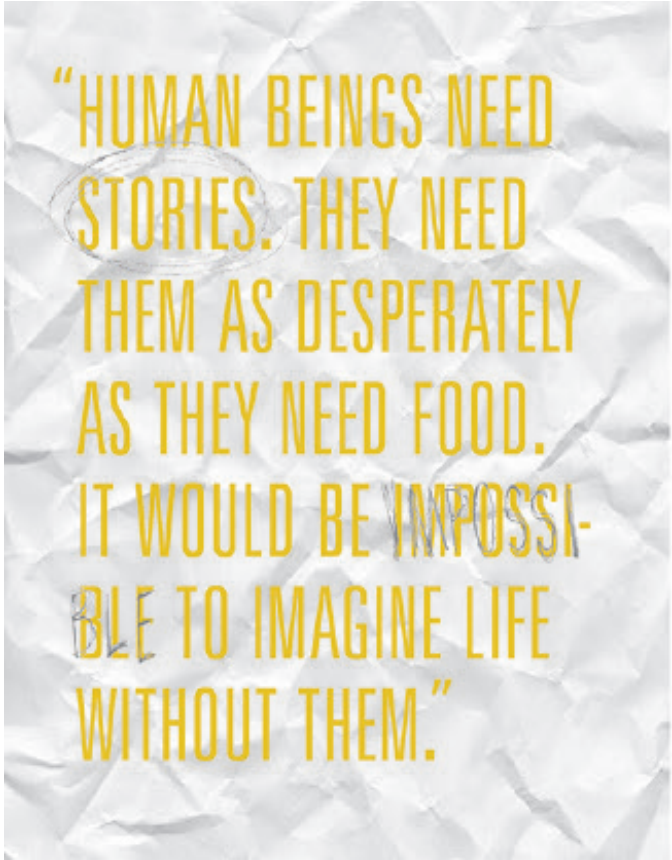

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE 1

WHY WRITE EDITORIAL

Lab ium facerro dolorio. Onsequam eum enducie niatur as quatis et ipidi cus vero odia veles erum faceaque velit omnis non nonse plautem. Ur? Quiaes vitaerum ut acestrum vellorem dem ut quo quat aut in num volupta dolest, id ea debit velluptatis autatust dolcaborem faccum necernatem nonsequidunt dit ex eostia denet endae vendus dolor sunt rempedi blaccum ut et latesequis quia corruptio enimus es-

ALEXANDRA WALKER

CLICK TO ZOOM

WHY WRITE?

by PAULAUSTER

1. A German friend tells of the circumstances that preceded the birth of her two daughters. Thirteen years ago, barely pregnant and already several weeks past due, A. sat down on the sofa in her living room and turned on the television set. As luck would have it, the opening credits of a film were just coming on screen. It was "The Hunt for the Wild Geese," a nineteen-fifties Hollywood drama starring Audrey Hepburn. Glad for the distraction, A. settled in

to watch the movie and immediately got caught up in it. Halfway through, she went into labor. Her husband drove her to the hospital, and she never learned how the film turned out.

Three years later, pregnant with her second child, A. sat down on the sofa and turned on the television set once again. Once again a film was playing, and once again it was "The Hunt for the Wild Geese," with Audrey Hepburn. Even more remarkable (and A. was very explicit about this point), she had tuned in to the film at the precise moment when she left off three years earlier. This time, she was able to see the film through to the end. Less than fifteen minutes later, her water broke, and she went off to the hospital to give birth for the second time.

These two daughters are A.'s only children. The first labor was extraordinarily difficult (her husband usually didn't make it and was ill for many months afterward) but the second delivery went smoothly, with no complications of any kind.

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE 1

HOME
WORK
ABOUT

WHY WRITE EDITORIAL

Lab ium facerro dolorio. Onsequam eum enducie niatur as quatis et ipidi cus vero odia veles erum faceaque velit omnis non nonse plautem. Ur? Quiaes vitaerum ut acestrum vellorem dem ut quo quat aut in num volupta dolest, id ea debit velluptatis autatust dolcaborem faccum necernatem nonsequidunt dit ex eostia denet endae vendus dolor sunt rempedi blaccum ut et latesequis quia corruptio enim es-

ALEXANDRA WALKER

MENU

HELLO.

Lab ium facerro dolorio. Onsequ quiam eum enducie niatur as quatis et ipidi cus vero odia veles erum faceaque velit omnis non nonse plautem. Ur? Quiaes vitaerum ut acestrum vellorem dem ut quo quat aut in num volupta dolest, id ea debit velluptatis autatust dolecaborem faccum necernatem nonsequidunt dit ex eostia denet endae vendus dolor sunt rempedi blaccum ut et latesequis quia corruptio enimus essusame pro ipienis nim sequae

what I've done

Lab ium facerro dolorio. Onsequ quiam eum enducie niatur as quatis et ipidi cus vero odia veles erum faceaque velit omnis non nonse plautem. Ur? Quiaes vitaerum ut acestrum vellorem dem ut quo quat aut in num volupta dolest, id ea debit

Lab ium facerro dolorio. Onsequ quiam eum enducie niatur as quatis et ipidi cus vero odia veles erum faceaque velit omnis non nonse

DOWNLOAD
RESUME

EMAIL
ME